Katie has successfully advocated for legislation that benefits women and families, supported anti-human trafficking initiatives, and organized events, voter engagement efforts, and fundraising campaigns.

As a Public Policy Program Manager at Meta, Katie facilitates global policy, strategic alignment, and operational efficiency. She effectively measures and communicates the value and impact of programs that empower small businesses, protect youth, and expand content accountability and digital literacy. Katie also shares her expertise as a consultant for nonprofits like Housing Crisis Action, advocating for pro-housing policies and developments. In her previous role, she managed operations for PARCA, a nonprofit service provider for individuals with disabilities. Guiding her work is a deep commitment to tikkun olam - repairing the world.

Katie, a proud first-generation American and daughter of refugees, speaks fluent Russian and is improving her Japanese and Hebrew. She holds a B.A. in Political Science from Dominican University of California and lives in Novato with her rocket-scientist husband.
